VICE PRESIDENT PENCE HIRES OUTSIDE COUNSEL

1 Vice President Mike Pence has hired a lawyer known for defending government officials in high-profile investigations to help him through probes into whether there were ties between the election campaign of President Donald Trump and Russia, his office said. U.S. intelligence agencies have concluded that Moscow interfered in last year's presidential campaign to try to tilt the vote in Trump's favor. Trump, who hired his own lawyer last month for probes by a special counsel and congressional committees, lashed out on Thursday after a report that he was under investigation for possible obstruction of justice and he dismissed as "phony" the idea his campaign colluded with any Russian effort to sway the 2016 election. FREED US STUDENT HAS 'SEVERE' BRAIN INJURY

2 An American university student who was detained for 17 months in North Korea and suffered a serious neurological injury was "brutalized" by the reclusive regime, his father said on Thursday. Despite the "severe" injury, Otto Warmbier, 22, is stable and receiving treatment at the University of Cincinnati Medical Center, center spokeswoman Kelly Martin said at a news briefing at Warmbier's high school in Wyoming, Ohio. Doctors are scheduled to provide further details about Warmbier's condition on Thursday afternoon. Warmbier has been in a coma since March 2016, shortly after he was sentenced to 15 years of hard labor in North Korea, the family said on Tuesday after he was released.

DRAFT MEMO: TRUMP TO LIMIT CUBA TRAVEL

3 President Donald Trump on Friday will tighten rules on Americans traveling to Cuba and significantly restrict U.S. companies from doing business with Cuban enterprises controlled by the military, according to U.S. officials who have seen a draft presidential memorandum. Trump will lay out his new Cuba policy in a speech in Miami that will roll back parts of former President Barack Obama's opening to the communist-ruled island after a 2014 diplomatic breakthrough between the two former Cold War foes. Taking a tougher approach against Cuba after promising to do so during the presidential campaign, Trump will make clear that a ban on U.S. tourism to Cuba remains in effect and his administration will beef up enforcement of travel rules under authorized categories, the officials said. 5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

TWITTER ROLLS OUT TWEAKS

5 Twitter Inc. said it would roll out a series of tweaks to its website and mobile applications from Thursday to further simplify the microblogging service's interface for its users. The changes include a new circular profile picture, a speech bubble instead of an arrow to reply to tweets and refinements to the fonts. Tweets on the company's mobile applications would now update instantly along with counts on "retweets," likes" and "replies," the company said. Twitter, which has faced criticism over the complex interface of its service in the past, has been constantly adjusting its platform based on user feedback. The changes also include a consolidated profile and privacy settings and a new navigation menu for users of Apple devices. REUTERS

Flying a new Philly-made flag with Pride and inclusivity

Philly will be celebrating Pride this weekend with two new colors added to its flag: black and brown.

Amber Hikes has had many a fire to flame or put out since being named by the mayor's office as the executive director of the Office of LGBT Affairs in February. Along with happily filling the leadership ranks of the Commission on LGBT Affairs with people of color, Philly's Hikes — a black queer woman — has tended to take on issues of racism and bigotry in the Gayborhood.

"I'd rather be busy than bored, but setting priorities for the most vulnerable marginalized population within the LGBTQ community has been the most important thing on my agenda," Hikes said. "When we're talking about discrimination in the LGBT community, it's not just about black people, but Asian and islander community members as well. That's a national problem that's been part of us since this nation was founded. I'm only here three months, but we're taking steps in the right direction."

One step is working with the Philadelphia Commission of Human Relations, which has just completed sensitivity training with Gayborhood bar owners, focusing on people of all races, for example. Another happy circumstance comes in time for this weekend's PrideFest and parade, with the city's Pride flag getting an addition of black and brown stripes atop the traditional six-color rainbow layout. Originally created by Gilbert Baker in 1978 (who passed this March), the rainbow motif was modified by the graphic designers at Philly's Tierney Communication.

"Tierney came to me, excited about this agency and my new direction for the office … and had already been working on plans for a flag due to their own vision of inclusivity," Hikes said.

Hikes' reaction when she first saw the flag? "Quite frankly, I teared up. I fell in love with it."

"As an agency, we're committed and devoted to diversity and inclusion — truly passionate about it," said Teri Terbec, a creative director with Tierney, who along with the design/advertising firm's Diane DiCicco, was directly involved in forging the Pride Day flag and working on the "More Color More Pride" campaign with the Mayor's office.

Last fall, before Hikes came to the Office of LGBT Affairs, they and Tierney's creatives started a dialogue about new images of inclusivity, and the flag seemed like a great start. "When Hikes saw the flag, she said she saw herself," said Terbec.

The new Pride flag is wonderfully symbolic and a solid identification of pursuing and maintaining inclusivity — not a solution, but rather a first step. Some in the LGBTQ community, however, say a flag is not enough and are skeptical and angered by the showiness around the display.

"I've heard the comments," said Hikes, who has been an activist since taking her first baby steps. "I don't understand 'anger' as a reaction to a symbol of inclusivity. Does more have to be done? Of course it does. A flag does not solve racism."

A symbol is only as good as the action behind it, something Hikes is appreciative of, hearing from all concerned in the community, LGBTQ or not.

Residents, activists to protest Penn Wynn eviction plan

Tenants have little recourse when faced with eviction in Philadelphia.

HAYDEN MITMAN
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Residents, activists to protest Penn Wynn eviction plan

In two weeks, about 60 residents, most of whom are low-income, of the 231-unit Penn Wynn House in West Philadelphia will likely be evicted from the building they now call home in order to make way for a planned $40 million renovation project.

Concerned that this could leave many homeless, activists and tenants plan to hold a protest on Friday at noon outside on the Center City offices of Ajay Raju, chief evangelist of Cross Properties Acquisitions — who purchased the 17-story Penn Wynn structure late last year — at the Centre Square Office Complex at 1500 Market St. in the hopes of moving back the eviction date until the fall.

After earlier efforts, detailed by WHYY's Newsworks, were able to push back the original eviction date from June 1 to June 30, protesters are now hoping that they can get this date pushed back to Sept. 1 in order to allow for more time for current tenants to secure housing.

The Philadelphia Tenants Union has joined with the Penn Wynn Tenants Association for the demonstration, and they are also hoping to have tenants' security deposits returned on the day they are evicted so that those evicted will be able to use those funds toward housing and other needs, instead of having to wait the traditional 30 days for them.

> "One of my greatest fears is to be homeless again."
> Penn Wynn resident Leon J. Tyer Jr.

Residents learned in February that they would be evicted by June.

"It's just inhumane," said Stephanie Altimari, communications director for the Philadelphia Tenants Union, of the impending evictions. "They are not going to have anywhere to go."

Cross Properties Acquisitions did not immediately respond to a request for comment, but their website claims the planned renovations to the Penn Wynn building will include "a gym, dog park, social lounge, pool and a 4,000 [square-foot] rooftop deck with uninterrupted views of the Philadelphia skyline."

During an interview this week, Altimari said that the low-income residents — many of whom are disabled — need the additional time to find adequate housing. She said that many are living on a fixed income of less than $800 a month, and they need time to find housing that not only fits their individual budgets but is also handicapped-accessible for those who need it.

"This still is not enough time because some of these people are on a fixed income," she said.

In order to highlight the residents' plight, the Philadelphia Tenants Union has created a video in which they have asked several tenants of the complex to detail their concerns over the impending evictions.

"One of my greatest fears is to be homeless again," said Penn Wynn resident Leon J. Tyer Jr. in the video. "You think that three months, 90 days is enough to move everybody, and it's not. … There's too many variables to think that three months is sufficient time for an individual to up his life and move anywhere they can."

New photos released of suspect in murder of PA police chief

Donald Eugene Webb is the only fugitive in the U.S. wanted for the murder of a police chief.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The FBI has released new photos of a Massachusetts man wanted for a 1980 murder.

The new photos released Thursday were taken on a cruise that Webb, who would be 85 years old now, and his wife took in 1979, about a year before he allegedly murdered Police Chief Gregory Adams in Saxonburg, Pennsylvania.

"We're asking the public to take a close look at these photographs that we recently acquired and contact us if they have any information about Mr. Webb's whereabouts," said Harold H. Shaw, special agent in charge of the FBI Boston Division, in a statement.

"The FBI cannot make the assumption Webb is deceased without verification," he added. "We're in the final stages of this investigation, and given Mr. Webb's age, we're doing everything we can to bring some closure to Chief Adams' family and the citizens of Saxonburg."

Webb was living in New Bedford, Massachusetts, with his wife and stepson when officials say he fatally beat and shot Adams on Dec. 4, 1980.

Webb's white Mercury Cougar, which authorities say was his getaway vehicle, was found in a parking lot in Warwick, Rhode Island, on Dec. 21, 1980.

"This suggests that Webb returned to the Providence/southeastern Massachusetts area of New England after the murder," the FBI said.

Donald Eugene Webb is wanted for the 1980 murder of a police chief.
FBI BOSTON

Blood evidence was found in the car, indicating that Webb was injured in the interaction with Adams, according to officials.

Around the time of the murder, Webb, then 49, was a "career criminal" who burglarized jewelry stores. He was wanted on federal charges for burglary in New York before the murder.

Officials believe that he was in Pennsylvania at the time of Adam's murder to check out another potential burglary target. Webb was known to stay in motels in eastern Pennsylvania, the FBI said, under the alias Stanley Portas, the name of his wife's dead former husband.

Webb is a white male with brown eyes and is 5-foot-9; he was approximately 165 pounds with graying brown hair at the time that he fled. Officials say he may have two tattoos: "DON" on the web of his right hand and "ANN" on his chest.

Webb was one of the longest-tenured people to ever appear on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted Fugitives list, according to the bureau; he was added to the list on May 4, 1981, and removed on March 31, 2007.

The FBI is offering a reward of up to $100,000 for any information about Webb's current whereabouts or the location of his remains.

Bubbles, drums and tears: Chaos outside court as Cosby jury deliberates

Bill Cosby leaving court. GETTY IMAGES

The scene at the courthouse where jurors are determining Bill Cosby's fate at his sexual assault trial devolved on Thursday into a carnival atmosphere complete with dramatic confrontations, marching drummers and a bubble machine.

The jury told Judge Steven O'Neill that they were deadlocked after more than 30 hours of deliberations, but he ordered them to continue.

On the steps of the courthouse, plenty of people had already made up their minds.

"It went from being a joke to all of this calamity," said a man holding a sign that read "Free Mr. Cosby" who would only give his first name, Garvey. "Everything I heard points to him being innocent."

With television cameras capturing every moment, Lili Bernard, who has accused Cosby of raping her while she was a guest star on his 1980s hit TV series "The Cosby Show," read a Bible passage aloud to Cosby defenders before tearfully hugging a friend.

Jewel Allison, a former model who says Cosby assaulted her in the 1980s, faced off against a woman holding a sign that read "Bill Cosby is innocent" in capital letters. Allison held the woman's hand as she tried to persuade her to change her mind and told the woman she would have had the same opinion if she had never been alone in a room with Cosby.

Minutes later, the sound of drumming filled the air as a woman carrying a sign reading "Perseverance to all survivors" pranced down the sidewalk firing a bubble machine. Two men wearing dark plastic masks and carrying drums marched behind her.

Earlier in the week, the woman had driven a U-Haul truck around the courthouse with a drawing of a middle finger with Cosby's name on it plastered to the outside.

As the rhythmic drumming continued, Victoria Valentino, a former Playboy bunny from the 1960s who says Cosby assaulted her decades ago, danced to the music on the courthouse steps. REUTERS

State attorneys general probe opioid drug companies

Officials did not specify which companies were under investigation.

A bipartisan group of state attorneys general announced on Thursday that they are jointly investigating the marketing and sales practices of drug companies that manufacture opioid painkillers at the center of a national addiction epidemic.

Attorneys general from states including Massachusetts, Texas, Illinois and Pennsylvania announced the investigation two weeks after Ohio Attorney General Mike DeWine sued five drug manufacturers for misrepresenting the risks of opioids.

"We are looking into what role, if any, marketing and related practices might have played in the increasing prescription and use of these powerful and addictive drugs," District of Columbia Attorney General Karl Racine, a Democrat, said in a statement.

It was unclear exactly how many states are involved in the probe, though officials said a majority of attorneys general are part of the coalition. Among those leading the probe is Tennessee Attorney General Herbert Slatery, a Republican.

Separate lawsuits by attorneys general in Ohio and Mississippi, the two states that have pursued opioid-related cases to date, have targeted Purdue Pharma LP, Johnson & Johnson, Endo International Plc, Teva Pharmaceutical Industries Ltd and Allergan Plc.

Teva in a statement said on Thursday it is "committed to the appropriate promotion and use of opioids." Representatives for the other companies did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

Opioid drugs, including prescription painkillers and heroin, killed more than 33,000 people in the United States in 2015, more than any year on record, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. GETTY IMAGES

The companies have denied wrongdoing, saying the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved their products as safe and effective and saying that they carried warning labels that disclosed their risks.

In announcing his office's lawsuit on May 31, Ohio Attorney General DeWine said the drug companies helped unleash the crisis by spending millions of dollars marketing and promoting such drugs as Purdue's OxyContin.

The lawsuit said the drug companies disseminated misleading statements about the risks and benefits of opioids as part of a marketing scheme aimed at persuading doctors and patients that drugs should be used for chronic rather than short-term pain.

Similar lawsuits have been filed by local governments, including two California counties, the cities of Chicago, Illinois and Dayton, Ohio, three Tennessee district attorneys, and nine New York counties. REUTERS

A (short) history of women behaving badly

Before you lies a list that should run longer than it does. There ought to be scores upon scores of movies that feature groups of women getting liquored up, getting into trouble, having the time of their lives, all without any pesky men around to steal their spotlight. Instead we get so few that every time we get a "Bridesmaids" or a "Bad Moms," they wind up described as "'The Hangover,' but with girls." With "Rough Night" — and next month's "Girls Trip" — we hope there will one day be enough that a list like this runs longer. Here's a list of the too few films about girls gone wild:

MATT PRIGGE

"The Sweetest Thing" (2002)

Cameron Diaz may have dominated the poster for "There's Something About Mary" but, one hair product-related mishap aside, she didn't get to join in on the raunch. She made up for that a few years later with a movie where the women (also including Christina Applegate and Selma Blair) are as sex-obsessed as the men. Only problem: It's not very good, and had it starred men, it would have been seen as a dog. Diaz returned to toilet humor again with "Bad Teacher," this time solo and with a higher batting average.

"Smiley Face" (2007)

OK, it's just one woman behaving badly. But when that woman is the mighty Anna Faris, and when Anna Faris spends the movie superduper-mega-high after accidentally eating an entire plate of pot brownies, that's enough power for 20 women. Faris stumbles about this candy-colored indie, stoned out of her mind and wreaking untold havoc, including on Marx's original "Communist Manifesto." It's hard to pick peak Anna Faris. Or maybe it isn't — the answer is "Smiley Face."

"Bridesmaids" (2011)

It was supposed to tear down that wall, make Hollywood realize comedies — or any movie in general — about and starring women would make as much money as those starring dudes. And despite grossing nearly $300 million, it didn't. To execs, it was seen as the old "exception that proved the rule." It took till last year for Hollywood to realize that they blew it — that had they been giving us movies like "Bad Moms" and "Wonder Woman" and "Hidden Figures" since 2011, they'd probably be even richer.

"Spring Breakers" (2013)

This freak hit from, of all people, Harmony Korine, isn't exactly a feminist tract; it's more eye candy for dudes than it is empowering for women. But the tale of Florida-bound college students who turn into masked vigilantes (all thanks to James Franco, natch) still belongs on this list, in part because Korine's satire is so sarcastic, and so layered that it manages to make fun of both entitled rich girls and its own male-gazey, horndog excesses.

"The Bling Ring" (2013)

At the time, Sofia Coppola's dreamy docudrama — about a gang of mostly teenage girls (and one guy) who take to stealing from Hollywood's rich and famous — was seen as a female response to "Spring Breakers." But it's really just a Sofia Coppola movie. That is, it not only doesn't judge its criminals but grooves on the thrill of being young and dumb, when breaking into Paris Hilton's home and stealing her bras doesn't seem like the type of thing that puts you in jail.

"Girlhood" (2014)

The original title of this French import is more like "Girl Gang" — and a more accurate description of what transpires. An African-French teen finds herself sucked into the orbit of a group of mean girls. But most of the film is about the joys of loner women finding each other. Few scenes are as transcendent as the one in which our heroes blast Rihanna's "Diamonds" and dance and scream. They wish the song would go on forever, and so may you.

"Bad Moms" (2016)

We have our issues with last summer's big sleeper hit, which doesn't allow its threesome (Mila Kunis, Kristen Bell and Kathryn Hahn) to cut loose the way the "Hangover" gang got to, despite being written by the guys who actually wrote "The Hangover." On the other hand: Mila Kunis getting wasted on rotgut whiskey! Kristen Bell standing up to her old-school sexist husband! Kathryn Hahn doing anything! Make a sequel where they really go wild.

The Owen Wilson-voiced Lightning McQueen finds himself far away from the NASCAR track in "Cars 3." PIXAR

"Cars 3"

Director: Brian Fee
Voices of: Owen Wilson, Cristela Alonzo
Rating: G

Perhaps we've been too hard on the "Cars" series. They're the runt of the Pixar litter — the ones that, for mainstream animation's most inspired and entertaining wing, seem curiously undercooked, beneath them, more like knock-offs by lesser studios. Still, don't write them off completely. The first and the third — let's collectively forget the Larry the Cable Guy-heavy "Cars 2" ever happened — are surprisingly heavy. There's something badass about "Cars 3," a movie aimed squarely at kids that's all about the pains of getting old.

The end has come for our hero, the blindingly red NASCAR superstar Lightning McQueen (voice of Owen Wilson). He's still fast, but not as fast as the new flock of talking cars, including a souped-up speeder voiced by Armie Hammer. He'll go back into training — but we strongly suspect he's just deluding himself.

What follows isn't quite "Inside Out" — a movie we really don't know how kids watch without becoming active depressos — but it is a brutally honest, often grouchy affair, wrestling with what happens to a superstar does after they've aged out of their profession.

Then again, if only it were funnier or more inspired. The "Cars" movies look gorgeous but they lack Pixar's usual jam-packed groove. With them, you'd expect a bummer of a kid's movie to at least have more jokes. MATT PRIGGE

"All Eyez on Me"

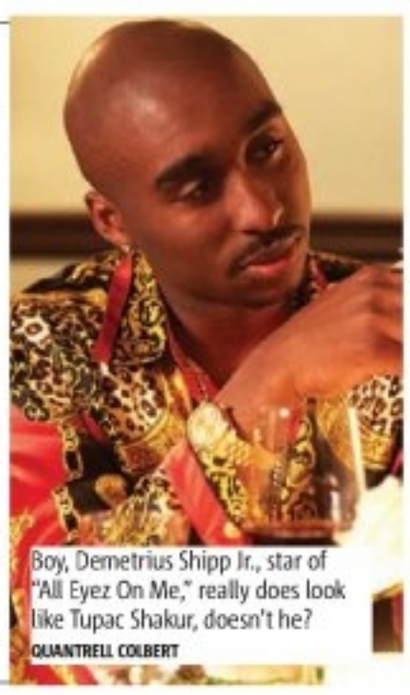
It's no fun to report that the 2Pac movie is bad. Bad comes in many flavors, and "All Eyez on Me" is bad in the way that breaks your heart. It's about a legend whose life story needs telling, made by people who clearly intend to honor him. It hits screens playing to audiences ready to give it love, or at least willing to cut it some slack.

It doesn't take long to realize something — maybe everything — is off. Well, almost everything: Demetrius Shipp Jr. really does look the spitting image of Tupac Shakur. He's the right 2Pac for the wrong 2Pac movie — the only solid thing in a film that's cut-rate, disorganized, hopelessly compromised.

At first it's a simple matter of cheapness. It's not Lifetime-cheap, but it's hard not to wince at the copious stock footage interludes, the repeated use of the same clubs and hotel rooms, the noticeably poor rear projection car scenes. The writing is definitely Lifetime-level — laughable dialogue, cliched superstar movie cliches.

"Straight Outta Compton" had dumb biopic scenes, too. It also had the talent and the budget to make you feel like you were there alongside N.W.A., witnessing history in the making. "All Eyez on Me" is all Cliffs Notes, only compiled by a sweaty octopus. It's a movie where little works, with too many things conspired against it. You want to give it the benefit of the doubt, but only the most charitable would say it's anything but a disaster. MP



Boy, Demetrius Shipp Jr., star of "All Eyez On Me," really does look like Tupac Shakur, doesn't he? QUANTRELL COLBERT

We wish a comedy with Zoe Kravitz, Ilana Glazer, Jillian Bell and Scarlett Johansson was funnier than "Rough Night." SONY

"Rough Night"

If you build it, they will come. And if you cast five funny women in a drug-soaked farce involving a dead body, it will be funny. Neither of these statements is true. "Rough Night" rolls into multiplexes with the swagger of a gambler entering a casino convinced they will beat the house. Instead it plays like a rough draft for a comedy, in which everyone showed up assuming they'd kill it then did not.

"Rough Night" is being sold as the latest "'The Hangover,' but with girls," though it's really an all-female "Very Bad Things," a very bad movie from 1998 in which a wild bachelor party ends with a dead stripper. "Rough Night" is considerably less unpleasant, perhaps because women tend to be less crappy than men. But it creates its own conceptual problem: Are we supposed to want our heroes (led by Scarlett Johansson's future bride) to get away with accidentally murdering their own stripper?

We wouldn't bring up ethical concerns if it was funnier. The writing is sloppy and unimaginative, stranding our talented leads in a beach house and giving them little to do but shriek and bicker and light off on anticlimactic misadventures. We take no pleasure in noting that the real MVP of this female-driven comedy is a dude: Paul W. Downs, as Jess' panicky fiance, who keeps dragging a repetitive movie in weird and unexpected directions. MP

"47 Meters Down"

Director: Johannes Roberts
Stars: Mandy Moore, Claire Holt

For every "Armageddon," there is a "Deep Impact"; for every "A Bug's Life," an "Antz." Last summer saw the release of "The Shallows," a bare-bones survival thriller stranding Blake Lively on an outcropping of rock with a hungry predator in the surrounding surf. Now "47 Meters Down" has emerged as that shark tale's "A Shark Tale." But whereas last year's edition of the Great White vs. Passable Caucasian showdown enlivened Lively's deadly dilemma with creative camerawork and even pacing, its spiritual successor waters down an already watery premise.

Two major differences separate the films, IDing "47 Meters Down" as the weaker of the pair. The first is former "Aquaman" star (on "Entourage," at least) Mandy Moore, returning to the waves as a passive, otherwise nondescript 30-something on vacation with her younger sister (Claire Holt) to recuperate from a stinging breakup. You'd be frazzled, too, if an accident with a ramshackle cage-diving outfit had left you locked in a metal box on the ocean floor with a rapidly depleting supply of oxygen, plus a hungry shark.

Those are the unenviable circumstances from which our gal Moore must escape — a sort of submerged "127 Hours" with one toothy variable in the equation. Though this game may be set to a higher difficulty level, the increased resourcefulness it demands fails to bolster the drama. It's impossible to give a slim fraction of a damn about Moore's ex-boyfriend troubles when she's got all the chemistry she could ever need with the 20-foot shark angrily hovering above her cage.

"47 Meters Down" places a big bet on its claustrophobic, minimal premise, but it's all a bluff; Moore's doesn't have the chops to pull off this uniquely demanding role, and director Johannes Roberts fails to provide her with photography that places the audience inside her predicament. As a result, we're never fully convinced that this tremulous heroine is worth investing in at all. In a movie pitting woman against shark, it's a bad sign when you find yourself rooting for the shark.

8 Things you can't miss at the

Get ready to party.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

American Pride Flag leads the parade.

Originally conceived to commemorate the Stonewall riots in New York City — the start of the LGBT-civil-rights movement — Philly Pride's 29th annual Pride-Day Parade and Festival invites old friends and new, young and old, to celebrate the gay/trans community while still honoring that June night in 1969. For three days and nights this weekend, Philadelphia is rainbow-colored and proud of it.

"The purpose of this parade is different from any other gay parades, including Outfest, which is about coming out," says Franny Price, the executive director of Philly Pride since 1998. "We went from protest to celebration, but we never forgot that past. This is about being visible, and with that visibility, we are walking for diversity. Young, old, black, white, male, female, doctors, lawyers, mechanics — you name it."

Here is a handful of the best reasons to attend the PrideDay Parade and Festival.

Henri David

The proprietor of the Halloween jewelry boutique with his super-popular annual Halloween Ball is the official master of ceremonies of the PrideDay Parade at Penn's Landing. But look for the unofficial mayor of the Gayborhood to make fashion-forward appearances throughout the entire three-day run. As far as "can't miss" goes, David is the very definition.

The Philly Pride Kick-Off Block Party

At 12th and Locust, The Philly Pride Kick-Off Block Party starts things off Friday night, and the Gayborhood comes alive with nearly every bar on the block hosting its own DJ staging area. To go with the dancing, there is everything from mechanical shark rides ("instead of mechanical bulls," says Price) and blow-up horse races. Plus, this party is the last time you can get discounted ($10) wristbands for Sunday's festival to save yourself the long lines into the Penn's Landing Great Plaza.

Philly Pride Parade and Festival

The William Way Homecoming
With William Way as the official nonprofit landing strip for LGBT Philadelphia on a daily basis, the homecoming Saturday at 11 a.m. will become a ground zero for anyone who has been involved in its care, feeding and activism within the past 40-plus years of serving the community.

Mr. and Miss Philly LGBT Pride 2017
Just like your high school prom, every Pride Fest needs its royalty. This year it's the 81-year-old Molasses Jones and the ever-lovely Tina Montgomery, who were recently crowned at Bob & Barbara's. Let their reigns be fruitful.

Drag queen Sandy Beach
Sandy Beach has been an Atlantic City/Philadelphia entertainment icon for so long that Ben Franklin better look over his shoulder to see if he's still got a gig representing the city. Loud, brassy, ballsy and bold, Beach will be a special guest performer at Sunday's Pride Parade, but expect impromptu performances wherever she might be.

The Philadelphia Gay Men's Chorus ready to march.
ALL PHOTOS BY PATRICK HAGERTY FROM THE PRIDEDAY FEST AND PARADE 2016

Dance troupes at the parade
From 13th and Locust (where the parade route starts) to Penn's Landing's Great Plaza (where it ends and the rest of the Pride event is staged), there will be a fair share of Philadelphia acts shaking their butts off on Sunday, starting at 11:30 a.m. Look out for troupes like Kemar Jewel & the Xcel Dance Crew and D2D: Dare to Dance.

Comedian Sandra Valls
Los Angeles-based comedian Valls has several unique perspectives that landed her on the Latin Divas of Comedy and the Red, Hot & Herlarious tours, mainly in that she is both Mexican and a lesbian. She's also outrageously funny, to boot. Catch her performance on Sunday.

Nancy and Beth
The headliners of the Pride Fest Parade, Nancy and Beth (Megan Mullally, aka Karen Walker on "Will and Grace," and Stephanie Hunt, an actress who was most recently in "The Catch" on NBC but is best known for her role in "Friday Night Lights"), have created a comically vaudevillian musical duet that's more of an all-singing, all-dancing live revue than your everyday singer-songwriter act.

Flyers 2017 NHL draft Q&A with Russ Cohen

Will the Flyers end up with Nico Hirscher or Nolan Patrick with Pick 2 in next week's NHL draft?

ERIC GOLDSTEIN
@EricEsponda
sports@metro.us

The Flyers are highly likely going to select either Canadian center Nolan Patrick or Swiss center Nico Hischier with the second overall pick on June 23 at the NHL Draft in Chicago.

To get a better understand of each player, we asked Russ Cohen, a co-host on "Hockey Prospect Radio" that airs on Siriux/XM NHL Network Radio and TSN markets, for his expert take.

Why would Patrick be a good fit for the Flyers?
They don't have a guy like Patrick. If [the Devils, who select No. 1, pass on him and] he were to fall to the Flyers, they would be thrilled. He's a hard worker, he works hard in the corners, he's a very smooth skater and he knows how to get to the net. He is 6-foot-3, 198 pounds so you know he is going to put on more muscle, and he's going to be a hard guy to deal with. He's also good defensively and has a very active stick.

Why would Hischier be a good fit for the Flyers?
He's got a great one-timer, excellent speed and plays bigger than his 6-foot, 175-pound frame. No one worries about that part of him as he will fill out. He plays solid defense. He is a guy who can deke around two-to-three players to make a play. In a sense, he is more exciting than Patrick.

Are the Flyers going to get a generational-type player?
They will not get a generational player but they will get a star. You don't get a ton of those generational players available in the draft. But will these guys be stars? Yes, and both will be stars for 10-plus years and produce a lot of points.

Is either player ready for the NHL next year?
I wouldn't expect to see Nolan in the NHL right away. Flyers General Manager Ron Hextall is not the guy who wants to throw a guy into the fire no matter where they are drafted, and I agree. I think there is an outside chance with Nico, but I don't think it is going to happen. The only way I would have them making the team is if they were the best, or one of the best, guys at camp.

The Flyers will likely draft whoever is left at No. 2 between Nolan Patrick and Nico Hischier. GETTY IMAGES

Do you think the Flyers will trade the pick?
I think you always have to entertain it. But do I think Ron Hextall wants to trade it? No. I think he would need an unbelievable offer.

The Flyers have 11 total picks in the draft. Is this considered a deep draft?
Some think it is a deep draft and some don't. I think it's fine for centers and defensemen and I think there will be a lot of guys that can be found. If you can get three-to-four players out of a draft, then you are killing it.

Can Union get its groove back?

The Philadelphia Union look to return to the pitch well-rested and strong after a long hiatus.

JEFF MCMENAMIN
@Jeff_McMenamin
sports@metro.us

The Union have played themselves back into playoff contention. GETTY IMAGES

The Union (4-6-4) are discovering that sometimes to find your groove again, a break is all you need.

The Union were among the MLS teams who took a lengthy hiatus due to the World Cup qualifying matches the U.S. Men's National Team played in over the past couple weeks.

Their last regular season match was back on June 3, in a 2-1 loss to New York City FC (7-5-3) on the road. They took to the pitch for the first time since on Wednesday night in an Open Cup match against the Harrisburg City Islanders of the USL, which they won 3-1.

The layoff has been good for both health and team chemistry. Defender Joshua Yaro, who missed the team's first 13 matches due to a shoulder injury, logged 19 minutes as a sub against NYCFC and has had the chance to work his way back into the lineup. The second overall pick in 2016 was able to play a full 90 minutes against the Islanders.

"It's a good feeling when you get to step on the field again," Yaro said. "I [have the mindset] to do my job. Whenever that is and wherever that is I'm always ready to go."

The Union will return to regular season action on Sunday against their bitter rivals, the New York Red Bulls (6-7-2). The two teams last faced on May 6 in a 3-0 Union victory. The decisive win propelled the Union to four-straight wins, a club record.

"We know that we have the Red Bulls coming in on Sunday," Union manager Jim Curtin said, after Wednesday's win. "Things will get ramped up, it will get more intense, but overall I thought the performance was a good one. We got guys some minutes and got guys some sharpness and I have a lot of tough decisions [to make] for the weekend now."

After a six-match unbeaten streak from April 22 to May 20, the Union now have lost two-straight matches. They've fallen into 10th in the Eastern Conference standings. A win and three points over the sixth-place Red Bulls (20 points) would put the Union (16 points) in a great spot after the MLS restart.

Sunday's match against the Red Bulls will be played at 5 p.m. at Talen Energy Stadium. The match will air nationally on ESPN.

Which Eagles are the biggest trash talkers?

Malcolm Jenkins is a self-proclaimed trash talker. GETTY IMAGES

Anyone who has played a competitive team sport knows more than one trash talker.

Just last week in the NBA Finals, watching the interactions of the Warriors and Cavaliers stars in between plays was nearly as entertaining as the game action itself.

If you watch the Eagles on the practice field this season, you'll see the same thing. The dirt is being dished, and according to safety Malcolm Jenkins, the team is better for it.

"The type of guys we have started to build around as a team are ultracompetitive no matter what the situation is and that breeds for everybody a culture where the game gets elevated on every single snap," Jenkins told the media after the conclusion of the team's final minicamp practice Thursday. "We have prideful guys and some trash talkers and it hasn't always been like that."

The coaching styles of head coach Doug Pederson — who says he is dedicated to creating an intense and competitive training camp in July and August — and defensive coordinator Jim Schwartz have been reflected in in-your-face players who use the practice field as a proving ground.

"There's more [trash talkers] now and there is an elevated performance because of it," Jenkins reiterated. "The type of personalities we have been able to acquire over the last couple of years is a different vibe for the team."

It resembles an old-style football, the kind that grinds and makes opposing offenses fight for every yard. And perhaps the Eagles can get in the heads of their opponents through the art of trash talk. So who are the biggest culprits?

"Myself and Brandon Graham," Jenkins said smiling as he scanned the room. "Rodney [McLeod] is a guy who is hypercompetitive, we've been able to get Zach Ertz going a little bit, Carson [Wentz] will indulge every now and then, and the coaches get into it sometimes too."

The Eagles, as well as the rest of the NFL, will take a five week vacation from organized practices with the coaches going silent as the players relax and work out on their own. Jenkins, entering Year 2 of the Pederson era, know exactly what to expect when he returns to the NovaCare Complex on July 24.

"This year we know its going to be a tough, physical camp," Jenkins said. EVAN MACY

Aries Do not share personal information. Someone will be eager to take advantage of you or make you look bad. Don't get involved in gossip or disclose secrets.

Taurus Let your imagination take you on a journey. To follow a dream, you must be able to envision what it is you want to achieve.

Gemini Be careful how you handle others, or you will end up being the one who looks bad. An innovative plan will help you move past a multitude of misgivings.

Cancer Take care of odds and ends that you've left undone. You'll feel better heading into the weekend if you have less on your mind. Plan a romantic adventure.

Leo Hold off getting involved in financial schemes. Listen carefully and look at the fine print before you make a commitment. Keep a close eye on your money.

Virgo Stick to the truth and question anyone making suggestions that don't seem accurate. A creative approach to how you present your skills will attract attention.

Libra You won't be given all the facts about a course, position or the effects that will ensue should you make a decision based on trust alone. Ulterior motives are apparent.

Scorpio Mixing business with pleasure will help you get a better picture of the direction you should take. Market your skills to suit current economic trends.

Sagittarius You must be honest with yourself if you want to avoid making a mistake. Listen attentively and only make changes that are carefully considered and based on facts.

Capricorn Spend more time with the ones you love. Exploring options that will improve your lifestyle or surroundings will pay off. Romance will enhance your personal life.

Aquarius Easy does it. When dealing with family, youngsters and older people in your life, you are best off choosing your words wisely and listening carefully.

Pisces Show compassion when dealing with people. A romantic gesture will improve your personal life and bring you closer to the one you love. EUGENIA LAST
